EDUCATION TOPIC

Two staff members, Sylvain Menard and Darren Coates, from Clearwater Secondary reported on an inquiry project funded by an inquiry grant from the Board. The inquiry looked at how a micro credential system can help students in self-assessment of Core Competencies. The project involved developing language to describe three levels of achievement in each of the Core Competencies that students could use as a yardstick. Students used the website to gather evidence and reflect in preparation for a panel interview with three adults. To help students engage students in experiences that would lead to growth in the core competencies the school devoted a week to hands on activities they chose. Students worked on one project for the entire week which allowed for projects that would not typically fit in an 80 min class. Students wrote short stories, produced their own play, installed a disc golf course, and earned certifications allowing them to work during the summer in fighting wildfires.
